Absolving the sin of improvisation The key to absolving the sin of improvisation is to educate teams across the business with data-driven evidence. This ensures that they understand customers and their evolving behaviours, attitudes, experiences and preferences are rooted in facts instead of "winging in."

I can say that, without question, apart from Spolin's books, and those of the equally important Johnstone himself: 'Impro' and 'Impro for Storytellers', this book, "Improvisation at the Speed of Life" is the best book on the subject I've ever read. There are only a couple of others that I think are even remotely close.
