An Analysis of "Looking for the Gulf Motel" by Richard ...
Looking for the Gulf Motel (title poem) A few years ago I went to Marco Island wanting to revisit my childhood memories of vacationing there. But after decades of development, I hardly recognized the place. It was as if “my” Marco Island—and part of me—had disappeared. I found myself filled with the same kind of longing and nostalgia that my parents had for their lost Cuba.

Looking for the Gulf Motel (title poem) – Richard Blanco
Richard Blanco’s Looking for The Gulf Motel (University of Pittsburgh Press) is a compelling series of poems that explore Blanco’s Cuban heritage and his journey from adolescence to manhood, from places like Florida to places like Maine and, most importantly from places like adolescence to places like manhood. Along the way he chronicles the gender stereotypes that haunted his youth, as well as the dynamics of a long-term relationship.

'Looking for The Gulf Motel' by Richard Blanco | Lambda ...
Richard Blanco’s latest collection of poems, Looking for the Gulf Motel, symbolizes that change in the sense that his poems mix Spanish and English, explore his Latino identify, and challenge what it means to be an American today. Beyond that, Blanco’s work packs an emotional wallop, especially when he deals with the themes of place and identity, the loss of his father, and the ache we’ve all felt at one point for connection and love.

Looking for The Gulf Motel on JSTOR
One was this year’s inaugural poet, Richard Blanco. After reading Blanco’s most recent book, Looking for The Gulf Motel, I am struck by how this poet moves beyond the merely self-referential into the truest and hardest work a memoirist can do—plumbing both the depths and the reliability of memory itself. Take, for instance, the haunting refrain from Blanco’s title poem, “ There should be nothing here I don’t remember...
