Habila: review*

Pollution of the Niger Delta waters and land through environmental degradation is only the most obvious kind that the novel depicts; what the author makes us realise is the human corruption of greed, irresponsibility and wanton violence that precedes the pollution of river waters and land – of which the oil-smudged natural scenery is merely the manifestation.

strategies based on superwetting surfaces for oil–water separation have regained tremendous attention due to their being low cost, highly efficient and environmentally friendly. Besides the usual superhydrophobic, superhydrophilic/underwater superoleophobic and dual superlyophobic surfaces, very novel and unprecedented surfaces with special extreme wetting behavior have been widely used in oil–water separation.
