On Freud's 'Mourning and Melancholia' by Sigmund Freud

Mourning and Melancholia (German: Trauer und Melancholie) is a 1918 work of Sigmund Freud, the founder of psychoanalysis. In this essay, Freud argues that mourning and melancholia are similar but different responses to loss. In mourning, a person deals with the grief of losing of a specific love object, and this process takes place in the conscious mind.

Mourning and Melancholia - Wikipedia

Sigmund Freud himself published a paper in 1917, just in the wake of World War I, musing on the psychological responses to loss. In this paper, which he called Mourning and Melancholia, Freud posits that there are two different kinds of responses to loss, called (you guessed it!) mourning and melancholia. Both responses look similar as far as mood or expression, because they both deal in grief.

Mourning and Melancholia: Freud's Thoughts on Loss - Depth

In this paper Freud states that mourning and melancholia share common features, such as inhibition of activity, cessation of interest in the outside world, loss of capacity to love etc. One prominent factor that distinguishes melancholia is loss of self regard, which is absent in case of mourning.

Freud, Mourning and Melancholia (1917) Freud begins by suggesting that mourning and melancholia share a cause, namely the loss of a love object, but while mourning is considered normal, melancholia is seen as pathological. Freud explains that when a loved object is lost, there is opposition to giving up the libidinal position.

Another Literature Review: Freud, Mourning and Melancholia

In Sigmund Freud's "Mourning and Melancholia" (1917) he offers the notion that melancholy and mourning are two different responses to loss. For Freud, pathological melancholy, unlike normal mourning, is a process in which separation from an object of attachment remained incomplete for some reason.

Amazon.co.uk: Freud mourning and melancholia

Mourning is regularly the reaction to the loss of a loved person, or to the loss of some abstraction which has taken the place of one, such as one's country, liberty, an ideal, and so on. In some people the same influences produce melancholia instead of mourning and we consequently suspect them of a pathological disposition.
