The pictures in our learner's dictionaries are a good source of vocabulary because they show lots of related items. The big pictures contain lots of different labels so that you can study other words along with the word you are looking up. For example, the word "butterfly" in English is both the name of an insect and the name of a swimming stroke, and at the entry for butterfly you can see pictures showing a selection of different insects, as well as a picture showing a number of different ...
